WCS school website were first created in FrontPage. We then migrated to Expression Web. While I have totally re-created most school sites in Expression Web, there are still some that are the same as in FrontPage. Often the author of that site is different.

If you get this window, select Do not replace the navigation structure of the destination site

!Publishing Site Structure

EW is telling you there's another author because your login name has changed and that is what is normally saved as the author name on the remote site. So, it is comparing your new login with the old and giving you the prompt.

Either way, you're going to have to publish the "Entire" site, and replace what EW now considers the "old" site.

The same would be true with EW, FrontPage, SharePoint Designer...etc ...etc.